The mission of the Tracy Aviary is to enrich lives and further the preservation of the natural world. Using our bird collection, programs and exhibits, we engage and educate others in order to transform their beliefs and behaviors about the natural world, and we participate in conservation efforts through research and direct action.

The Tracy Aviary is located on eight acres of land in the heart of Salt Lake City. A charitable act by Salt Lake City banker Russell Lord Tracy founded the Tracy Aviary when he donated his private bird collection to Salt Lake City and its children. Open to the public since 1938, the Tracy Aviary maintains a collection of approximately 400 birds representing about 135 species. Many of these birds are considered rare or endangered.
